

Mimi Masri Dining Room

Designer Mimi Masri transformed the dining area into a stylish underwater sanctuary. The light-to-dark treatment of the walls delivers a sense of direction and depth, while whimsical hand-painted jellyfish and overhead LED lighting bring the sea scene to life. Masri redesigned the hand-blown bubble chandelier to hang just above the dining table. "It resembles true bubbles that would escape from a diver's regulator," she says. Mirrors embellish the ceiling's timbered grid, which looks as if it's floating on the water's surface.

Joseph Pubillones Writer's Studio

"It shows the sophisticated side of coastal living," says Joseph Pubillones of the studio he designed. Despite its small (12x15 feet) proportions, the room offers plenty of seating without feeling stuffy. Polka-dot fabric panels instantly soften the wooden blinds on the windows. Patterns play a big role, appearing on the pillows, zebra-print chairs, paneled chests, and area rug. An antique loveseat and cozy club chairs form a sitting area around the two-tiered coffee table. Ceramic turtle shells enhance the tropical atmosphere. ➤
